Chips & Guacamole

We use only Hass avocados because they're the creamiest, most delicious of all avocado varieties. They're dark green and bumpy on the outside and velvety smooth on the inside, with a high fat content - but the good kind (whew). Every morning we mash the avocados by hand and make batches of guac from scratch.

Corn masa flour is used in our crispy corn tacos and tortilla chips. The corn tortillas we use for our tacos are made with just corn masa flour, water, the mineral lime, and high oleic sunflower oil, while our tortilla chips are made with corn masa flour, high oleic sunflower oil and water, a squeeze of lime juice and kosher salt. Mind. Blown.

Black pepper is such a kitchen staple that you've probably spent little time thinking about where it comes from. It's actually the dried berry and husk of the Indian vine, Piper Nigrum. When dried, the fruit is called a Peppercorn. Now we can both sleep at night.

Chips & Queso Blanco

What's Chipotle without chipotles? The short answer, not Chipotle. Our namesake ingredient, the chipotle chili pepper is a dried and smoked jalapeño produced using the age-old craft of smoking them over pecan wood for several days. These intensely smoky, spicy peppers are the foundation for much of the food we serve - from our chicken, steak, and Barbacoa to our beans and vinaigrette. Without them, we couldn't call ourselves Chipotle. Well, we could - but that would just be inaccurate. And tasteless.

Our citrus juice is a blend of lemons and limes, which are known for their high acidity and sharp flavor. The fresh lemons we buy are grown using fresh-growing practices that adhere to all USDA protocols regarding pesticide use. Compared to limes, lemons taste more sour. Sour-er? Who needs grammar. It's time to pucker up and eat your burrito.

Tortilla on the Side

Our flour tortillas are made with just four ingredients: wheat flour, water, canola oil, and salt. Extracted from rapeseeds, canola oil is used to add flavor and texture to the tortillas that we use in our soft tacos and burritos. While most of the canola oil in the U.S. is produced from genetically modified seeds, all of the canola oil used to make our tortillas is non-GMO.
